

The University Of Kentucky College Of Law invites applications for a full-time faculty position to teach in the law school's Legal Research and Writing program beginning in the 2018-2019 academic year. A successful candidate will teach two or more courses in the Legal Research and Writing program, including at least one section of the legal research and writing course for first-year law students (approximately 20 students per section). The course for first-year law students is a year-long, four-credit course that introduces students to legal writing, analysis, and research. Law librarians teach the research component of the course, which is approximately 1 of the 4 credits. Thus, the new faculty member must be able to work collaboratively with other faculty involved in the Legal Research and Writing program.

The position offers an initial contract as Assistant Professor of Legal Research and Writing (non-tenure eligible) for a term not to exceed three years. After the initial appointment period, the successful candidate will be eligible for a renewable, five-year appointment. The salary will be commensurate with experience. The appointment is a nine-month, academic year appointment. Faculty members in the Legal Research and Writing program receive a Faculty Development Allowance for expenses related to professional development efforts, including travel and registration expenses associated with academic conferences. They are also eligible to receive grants for summer research.

Qualified candidates will have a J.D. degree from an ABA-accredited law school, as well a distinguished academic record, strong analytical, writing, and research skills, and substantial legal-practice experience. A minimum of two years of experience in substantial legal-practice is strongly preferred. Candidates must also possess a commitment to students and to teaching in the legal writing field, which involves significant student interaction and evaluation of students' written work.
