

To whom it may concern:

In 2013, the Hispanic National Bar Association (HNBA) launched an exciting and bold new program to increase Latino representation in the field of intellectual property law. In initial partnership with Microsoft, and now expanded to include Adobe, Apple, Facebook, Google and Lenovo, the HNBA Intellectual Property Law Institute¹ (IPLI) is making a difference.

Innovation is the lifeblood of the U.S. economy and IP law is an increasingly important factor in America's future economic strength. Yet, statistics show that Latino lawyers are underrepresented in the field of IP law. The low numbers suggest a lack of understanding about IP law, a lack of role models, and a misconception about the skills and background needed to practice in the IP field. Latino IP attorneys were 1.8% of the profession, and after six years and a 75% success rate, IPLI has helped increase those numbers.

Each year the IPLI selects up to 30 law students from law schools throughout the country to participate in this IP law immersion program. Competition for spots in the IPLI is high. Selected candidates spend a week in Washington D.C., where the IPLI takes place. Travel to and from Washington, D.C., lodging, meals and materials are covered by the IPLI. The IPLI provides substantive instruction, hands-on practical experience, writing workshops, visits to U.S. government institutions related to IP law (Patent and Trademark Office, Copyright Office, Federal Trade Commission, House and Senate Judiciary Committee, U.S. International Trade Commission, U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit), briefings from leading IP practitioners and congressional and executive branch authorities, mentorship relationships, and networking opportunities—all designed to give participants a broad understanding of IP law practice.

The IPLI is anchored by a briefing on issues in an active patent litigation case followed by attending live oral arguments on the same case before the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit ("CAFC"). Attendees also receive a rare behind the scenes tour of the court and meet CAFC Judges and law clerks. The Honorable Jimmie V. Reyna of the CAFC hosts the group at the court and speaks to the students about IP law and the court's role in its development.

We realize that the timing for the IPLI conflicts with the summer intern and clerkship schedules of many firms. We believe, however, that the benefits to the students, as well as to the firms for which they work, will far outweigh any scheduling conflict, and we ask that you allow the participation of any student in your program that applies and is selected.

If you have any questions about the program, please go to: www.HNBA.com. We hope you will join us in making the IPLI a premiere experience for the students and a shining example for transformative change.
