Pairing pragmatism and creative thinking helps me achieve innovative solutions to my clients' goals.

Tyler Quillin is an attorney in DWT's Seattle office, where he concentrates his practice on legal issues in the technology industry relating to intellectual property (IP) and technology transactions. Tyler regularly drafts and reviews licensing agreements, master services agreements, terms of use, and privacy policies. As a former litigator, he enjoys helping clients protect their creations, and prioritizes keeping them informed so that litigation can be avoided at all costs.

Prior to law school, Tyler served for three years with Teach for America as a teacher of 6th and 7th grade special education and, later, 12th grade English.
