

To whom it may concern:

In 2013, the Hispanic National Bar Association (HNBA) launched an exciting and bold new program to increase Hispanic representation in the field of intellectual property law. In initial partnership with Microsoft, and now expanded to include Amazon, Apple, Disney, Genentech, Google, and Pfizer, the HNBA/VIA Intellectual Property Law Institute<sup>1</sup> (IPLI) is making a difference.

Innovation is the lifeblood of the U.S. economy and IP and tech law are increasingly important factors in America's future economic strength. Yet, statistics show that Latino lawyers are underrepresented in the fields of IP and tech law. The low numbers suggest a lack of understanding about these fields, a lack of role models, and a misconception about the skills and background needed to practice. When the IPLI was launched, Latino IP attorneys were 1.8% of the profession. Now, on its eleventh year and having over a 70% success rate, the IPLI has contributed to an increase in the numbers.

Each year the IPLI selects up to 30 law students from law schools throughout the country to participate in this IP immersion and tech law program. Competition for spots in the IPLI is high. Selected candidates spend a week in Washington D.C., where the IPLI takes place. Travel to and from Washington, D.C., lodging, meals, and materials are covered by the IPLI. The IPLI provides substantive instruction, hands-on practical experience, writing workshops, visits to U.S. government institutions related to IP law (Patent and Trademark Office, Copyright Office, House and Senate Judiciary Committee, U.S. International Trade Commission, U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit), briefings from leading IP and tech law practitioners and congressional and executive branch authorities, mentorship relationships, and networking opportunities—all designed to give participants a broad understanding of these fields of practice.

The IPLI is anchored by a briefing on issues in an active patent litigation case followed by live oral arguments on the same case before the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit ("CAFC"). Attendees also meet CAFC Judges and law clerks. The Honorable Jimmie V. Reyna of the CAFC speaks to the students about IP law and the court's role in its development.

We realize that the timing for the 2023 IPLI may conflict with the summer intern and clerkship schedules of many firms. We believe, however, that the benefits to the students, as well as to the firms for which they work, will far outweigh any scheduling conflict, and we ask that you allow the participation of any student in your program that applies and is selected.
